

Being the only middle school girl wasn't intimidating at all. Partially because I had been the only girl in many other things. I started thinking about this more and I knew why it wasn't intimidating. I'm the only girl in my baseball league. At first when I started playing baseball at seven years old, it was intimidating. But, after five years all the boys accepted me as Emmie, not just the girl. When I was younger I was the only girl in my preschool class. I also played flag football with boys. I realized all of this helped me with robotics and it helped me become more comfortable being the only middle school girl.
