

When they first joined robotics, Sylvia and Crystal were two of only six girls on a team of 20. Most of the members were already close friends, which made it difficult for them to find support and have their voices heard.

Where are the girls?

They felt more involved and appreciated when they found mentors in the older female team members. So, if there was not a huge problem, what triggered the birth of 200G?

The reason is simple: Crystal and Sylvia's story is on the positive end of the spectrum. Many of those on 200G, such as Nadia Nguyen, did not have such an encouraging experience. Prepare those tissues because her tale is the definition of persistence!