

This picture shows my team's robot from last year, in the same position where it was placed months before when we left it with school and worlds being canceled. With the rubber bands snapped and boxes all around it, it reminds me of a sad scene from a movie where a person finds old objects of the past. This is what our robot feels like, a memory of the past that's served its purpose. However, it's what gave my current team the resources to build our new robot that hopefully will do just as good as the previous one had.