What makes Tmat 6 unique is what you probably always hear from a team when you ask them what makes them special, and the answer is that we are a family. As cliché as it may sound, in Tmat 6, it is a reality. But don't be confused. We're not talking about a model family, perfect in which each of its members fulfills their role perfectly. Instead, we're talking about a team that is aware of its imperfection and decides to push itself to become better, not just as individuals but as a team.

In Tmat, there are currently three teams, but even so, Tmat 6 stands out. Not because they are the best in the field or have the best drivers, builders, programmers, and designers, but because even in the defeat which we have experienced, we won't lie and say that we did not suffer or were sad—that's a given. But in those moments, we see what Tmat 6 really is. We're not a group of people with individual goals of winning and being the best. Maybe at the beginning of the season, we were, but we evolved. Each member became a friend, a partner inside and outside of the competition. Even in our limbo of defeat and personal sadness, we remained united and made each other laugh, not hiding what each one felt but talking about it and becoming honest with each other.

We are a team that takes into account that each member has personal goals, but even knowing that, we have the confidence that we can count on others for advice, help, or even to be listened to. In Tmat 6, we have the internal joke that is, we adopt the people who feel down or not included. We accept them as if they were one of us because it is true—we are all Tmat, but more than that, we all enter as strangers and totally different people, and we become more than that. More than a team formed for a competition, we become friends and family. This lasts even when people end their stay on the team. We joke around, laugh at our mistakes, and make each member feel welcome, making every day of work enjoyable, whether in the laboratory or even on the way to travel. We are a team that has fun and works when it needs to be done. TMat6 is unique because the people who are on this team make it unique.
